

From Editor

By employing publishing on the Web site, it is surely possible to reduce the publication turn-around time. But, it is still time-consuming to determine the contents and edit manuscripts and papers.

By the way, we are facing the so-called elderly society with few young people in the advanced countries. It is apparent that the number of students who want to major in science and engineering is decreasing. It is however gratifying that many young people begin showing their interest in wireless communications engineering due to the recent advancement of mobile communications. We are hoping that this review encourages them and contributes toward the growth of satellite communications young engineer

We are expecting that fresh brains create new satellite communications services as well as a broadband service as an infrastructure medium in our daily life.

(Editor M.T)